

Wayfarers Master Document

Introduction

Wayfarers encourages to handle a variety of trials, physical, mental, and moral, not to break them, but for them to grow in meaningful ways.

What you need to play

How to Play

Part 1- Creating a Character

Session Zero

Every campaign should start with a Session 0. In a Session 0, the GM and players talk about the type of campaign they are about to embark on. This is where the GM lays out the framework and setting of the campaign. The GM and players should collaborate on the details that will affect their character, such as their history, family background, and prior affiliations. The session 0 will build upon those features into a minigame-like activity that allows Players to establish preexisting bonds as well as information and objectives for the campaign. This is also a great opportunity for Players to discuss what kind of role they would like to play in the party.

Class Dice: 1d12

Proficiencies

Ability Proficiency Level Increase (Choose Two): Might, Dexterity, Resolve

Skills (Choose Two): Taming, Athletics, Awareness, Intimidation, Knowledge: Nature, Survival

Weapons: Simple Weapons, Martial Weapons

Tools: None

Armor: Light, Shields

CLASS FEATURES

FURY- you gain 1 fury for every round you deal or take damage. Your fury maximum is equal to your Resolve score. You can decide to expend points of fury before any attack. You lose all fury after a battle.

Class Kit:

RAGE [1AP]- You imbue yourself with a primal power, granting you extraordinary might and resilience. You can enter a rage, provided you aren't wearing Heavy Armor. Your rage lasts for one minute, until you run out of fury, there are no enemies you can perceive, or you fall unconscious. While Active, your rage gives you the following effects:

- Damage Resistance- You have resistance to Bludgeoning, piercing, and slashing damage from Mundane and Supernatural sources.
- Rage Damage- When you deal damage with a melee or ranged attack using Might, you gain bonus damage equal to the tier level you are in.
- Might Advantage- You have advantage on Might tests.
- Tunnel Vision- You can't maintain Concentration and you can't cast spells.

UNARMORED DEFENSE- While you aren't wearing any armor, your Base Defense Score equals 10 + your Dexterity and Resolve Bonuses. You can use a shield and still gain this benefit.

WEAPON EXPERTISE- Your training with weapons allows you to use the Techniques of two kinds of melee weapons you have proficiency in.

Traits

Tier 1

- ☐ Fast Movement- Your speed is increased by 5 feet while you aren't wearing Heavy Armor.
- ☐ Primal Shout- You let out a scream. Everyone within 15 feet who fails becomes shaken.
- ☐ Primal Knowledge- You gain proficiency in another skill of your choice from the list of skills available to Berserkers. In addition, while your Rage is active, you can channel primal power when you attempt certain tasks; whenever you take an ability test using a skill you have proficiency in, you can make it as a Might check even if it normally uses a different attribute.
- ☐ Thrash [1AP]- you thrash a grappled foe. It takes bludgeoning damage equal to 2x your strength score.
- ☐ Reckless Attack- You throw aside all concern for defense. When you make your first attack on your turn, you can choose to attack recklessly. Doing so grants you Advantage on attack rolls using Might during your turn, but attack rolls against you have advantage until the start of your next turn.
- ☐ Brutality- While Raging, when you disarm, grapple, shove, or trip a foe, you deal blunt damage equal to your Might score.
- ☐ Adrenaline Rush- While you are raging, your speed increases by 10 feet and you gain a bonus to Athletics tests made to lift objects and force things open equal to your tier level.

- ☐ Moment of Clarity- You push back your rage for a moment to think clearly. Until the end of this turn, you can use abilities that use your concentration.
- ☐ Ferocious Critical- Your criticals become more potent. On a critical hit with a Might-based melee weapon, add one additional damage die, The target's DV is also decreased by 2.
- ☐ Aggressive Lunge- When moving at least 20 feet, when you hit a target with a melee attack, you can shove the target back 5 feet and move into the newly vacant area.
- ☐ Raging Thrower- Thrown weapons become especially deadly while raging. You can apply rage effects to weapons with the thrown property. You may also treat all one handed weapons as having the thrown property.
- ☐ Shake it Off- You gain a bonus against shaken effects equal to twice your Tier Level.
- ☐ ?- When raging,
- ☐ ?- When bloodied

Tier 2 (4th Action Point, 2 Rages, and Subclass feature)

- ☐ Feral Instinct- You have advantage on Initiative rolls and Dexterity tests and ?

- ☐ Brutal Strike- [As a special attack action], you may make a melee attack against a target. Creatures damaged by a brutal strike gain the [battered] condition until the end of your next turn. You may expend a physical focus to have the attack deal additional damage.
- ☐ Indomitable (Might)- If your total for a Might check is less than your Might score, you can use that score in place of the total.
- ☐ Rough Manipulation- While Raging, when you successfully disarm, grapple, shove, trample, or trip a foe, you deal bludgeoning damage equal to your Might modifier.
- ☐ Scouring Fury- (Requirement: your fury has a damage type) You unleash your fury and emit a powerful surge of primal energy. Each adjacent creature takes damage equal to your fury level.
- ☐ Juggernaut
- ☐ Lightning Reflexes
- ☐ Raging Resistance
- ☐ Furious Sprint [2AP]- You rush forward, moving 3x your movement speed in a straight line, ignoring speed penalties from things such as difficult terrain. You can spend an additional AP to sprint up to 4x your speed.
- ☐ Sundering Leap- Causes significant damage with the chance to sunder the target's armor
- ☐ Savage something- Attack that staggers and leaves opponents reeling
- ☐ [New Social Skill]
- ☐ [New Exploration Skill]
- ☐ [Upgraded Exploration Skill]
- ☐ [Upgraded Combat Skill]
- ☐ [Upgraded Combat Skill]

Tier 3 (5th Action Point, 2 Rages, and Subclass Feature)

- ☐ Brutal Critical- When you score a critical hit with a melee weapon or unarmed strike using Might, the target takes extra damage equal to your Berserker level. The damage is of the same type as the original damage source.
- ☐ Persistent Rage- Your Rage is so fierce that your fury does not decrease if you have not attacked or have been attacked. The Rage still ends if you are incapacitated, don heavy armor, die, or are no enemies in the vicinity.
- ☐ Relentless Rage- Your rage can keep you fighting despite grievous wounds. If you drop to 0 Hit Points while your rage is active and are not dead, you do not mark a vitality for not stabilizing yourself.
- ☐ {Fury Action}- You can spend fury on your leap and shout abilities
- ☐ Mighty Rage

- ☐ Weapon Fury
- ☐ Tempered Fury- When spending fury, you can choose the amount you want to spend

Tier 4 (6th Action Point, 2 Rages, and Subclass Feature)

- ☐ Rage Resurgence- You regain one expended use of your rage at the start of every battle
- ☐ Primal Champion- You embody primal power. Your Might and Resolve both increase by 1. Your max for those attributes also increase by 1.
- ☐ {Fury Action}
- ☐ Unbound Fury- Your fury damage is applied to all attacks that round
- ☐ Armor of Fury
- ☐ Devastator

Fury of the Bloodrager

For some Berserkers, the chaos and thrill of battle is pure ecstasy.

Tier 1

- ☐ Reckless Frenzy- Each time you reckless attack while your rage is active, you gain an additional point of Fury and deal extra damage to the first target you hit on your turn with a Might based attack equal to your Fury score.
- ☐ Blood Frenzy- Your rage effects inflict bleed damage.
- ☐ Furious Finish [1AP]- Make an attack. If it hits, you gain a bonus to damage equal to the number of rounds remaining in your Rage (maximum 10). After your strike, your Rage immediately ends and you are fatigued until you rest for 10 minutes
- ☐ No Escape [Reaction]- (Requirement: An enemy within reach attempts to move away from you) Move up to your speed, following the enemy and keeping it within your reach to the best of your ability, until it stops moving, you move your full movement speed. You can use No Escape to Burrow, Climb, Fly, or Swim if you have the corresponding movement type available to you.

- ☐ Wounded Rage [Reaction]- (Trigger: You take damage and are capable of entering a Rage) You enter Rage.
- ☐ Armored Assault- While wearing armor, when you charge into a creature, you can make an attack. If the attack hits, you deal an additional 1d4 damage.
- ☐ ?- Whenever you deal piercing damage, you deal an additional 1d4 bleeding damage.
- ☐ Bloodrage Vigor- When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with an attack, the berserker gains temporary hit points equal to your resolve score.

Tier 2

- ☐ Mindless Rage- You have immunity to the Charmed or Frightened conditions while your rage is active. If you are Charmed or Frightened when you enter a Rage, that condition ends on you.
- ☐ Crimson Vial- While raging, whenever you deal bleeding damage, you can instead heal for that amount.
- ☐ Reckless Abandon- When you Reckless attack while raging, you also gain temporary hit points equal to your Might score. These points vanish at the end of your rage.
- ☐ Follow Through [1 Action Point]- (Requirement: You missed on your last attack) Make a strike with the same weapon, adding [backswing and forceful traits]

Tier 3

- ☐ Retaliation- When you take damage from a creature that is within 5 feet of you, you can use your Reaction to make one melee attack against that creature,
- ☐ Path of the beast feature
- ☐ Blood Drunk- When Bloodied, your critical threat range increases by 1. When you're under 25% health, your threat range increases by 2.

Tier 4

- ☐ Intimidating Presence [2AP]- You can strike Terror into others with your menacing presence. At the expense of a rage, each creature of your choice within 30 feet of you- or 60 feet of you if your Rage is active- must make a Resolve test (TV equal to 12 + your Might modifier), provided the creature is aware of you and isn't behind total cover. On a failed test, a creature has the frightened condition for 1 minute. Creatures frightened take an additional 4 damage.
- ☐ Bloodlust-
- ☐ ?- When you are raging, if a creature within 5 feet of you hits you with a melee attack, the attacker takes 3 bludgeoning damage. The damage is piercing damage if you are wearing spiked armor.

VALOR OF THE GUNSLINGER

[Gunslinger Description]

TIER 1 ABILITIES

- ☐ RELOADING STRIKE [1AP]-
(Requirement: wielding a projectile weapon in one hand, and the other hand weilding a one-handed weapon or be free) You may make a melee attack and reload your gun in one fluid motion whenever you take the reload action. You do not need a free hand to reload in this way.
- ☐ RACONTEUR'S RELOAD [1AP]-
Your reload action does not provoke an attack of opportunity.
- ☐ COVERED RELOAD [1AP]- You may take the Cover or Hide action during your Reload action.
- ☐ QUICK SWAP [1AP]- Swapping out a weapon reloads the weapon you are currently weilding.
- ☐ INTO THE FRAY- At the beginning of your first round in combat, you may take a move action, and draw up to two one handed weapons
- ☐ TEN PACES- When you disengage, you can move up to 10 feet
- ☐ BULLET TIME [1AP]- You enter a state of heightened reflexes until the start of your next turn. During this time, you have advantage on ranged attack rolls, ability checks, and Dexterity saving throws. In addition, you expend one less

Valor on the first swift action that expends Valor.

TIER 2 ABILITIES

- ☐ FINISH THE JOB- (Requirement: your last attack failed with a projectile, and your other hand is either empty or wielding a melee weapon) Make an additional melee attack with your other hand
- ☐ PISTOLER'S RETORT [1AP]-
(Requirement: you are wielding a one-handed projectile weapon)
When an enemy within range misses you by 5 or more, you can use your reaction to make a ranged attack against that target
- ☐ DEAD EYE- On your first turn, If you are at least 60 feet away from your target and the target is unaware of you, your first attack deals an additional 1d6 precision damage per tier level.
- ☐ ONE SHOT, ONE KILL- Once per turn, when you reload a firearm, you can choose to reload it with a single bullet instead of its maximum amount. If you do, the next attack made before the weapon reloads deals extra damage for each bullet not loaded.
- ☐ QUICKDRAW- on the first round of combat, as long as you are not surprised, you can use a swift action to make one weapon attack with a projectile weapon. If the attack hits a hostile creature, you gain 1 Valor.

TIER 3 ABILITIES

- ☐ GUN X SWORD -If you deal damage to a foe with a one-handed projectile weapon, your opponent becomes Flat-Footed, granting you a +2 bonus on your next melee attack. If you deal damage with a melee attack against a foe, your next action from a one-handed projectile weapon does not provoke an attack of opportunity. These benefits are lost if not used by the end of your next turn.
- ☐ AUDACIOUS DUELIST - Gain a bonus to damage if there are no other creatures within 10 feet of you or the enemy
- ☐ VITAL SHOT- On a ranged projectile attack, if the target is Flat-Footed, the attack deals an extra die of weapon damage, and

Give something for killing a target that you marked

DEFT EXPLORER/SCAVENGER SENSE: Your training has taught you how to use your surroundings to gather resources, adapt and to acquire information. You can use this feature a number of times equal to your Wisdom modifier, regaining all uses after a long rest. Each time you use your Scavenger Sense, you can choose one of the following options below:

- PLANT LORE For 1 hour, you have advantage on Intelligence (Nature) checks to identify plants and their uses. Also when you have a First Aid kit when you forage in your favored terrain. Over the course of this hour, you can find plants and herbs needed to regain one use of your First Aid kit.
- WILD MEDICINE When you have a First Aid kit in hand, you can use an action and touch a target, spending one use of the kit and one use of your Scavenger Sense. That target regain hit points equal to $1d4 + \text{its amount of hit dice} + \text{your Wisdom modifier}$.
- PRIMEVAL AWARENESS You can spend your action to focus your awareness on the region around you. For 1 minute, you can sense whether the following types of targets are present within 1 mile of you (or within up to 6 miles if you are in your favored terrain): combat craft, infantry, mobile suits or warships. This feature doesn't reveal the targets' location or number.
- SNARES AND TRAPS

Natural Explorer:

You are particularly familiar with one type of natural environment and are adept at traveling and surviving in such regions. Choose one type of favored terrain: arctic, coast, desert, forest, grassland, deep space, colonial, or asteroid. When you make an Intelligence or Wisdom check related to your favored terrain, your proficiency bonus is doubled if you are using a skill that you are proficient in. While traveling for an hour or more in your favored terrain, you gain the following benefits:

- Difficult terrain doesn't slow your travel.
- Your party can't become lost.
- Even when you are engaged in another activity while traveling, you remain alert to danger.
- If you are traveling alone, you can move stealthily at a normal pace.
- When you forage, you find twice as much food as you normally would.
- While tracking, you also learn their exact number, their sizes, and how long ago they passed through the area.
- You can replace your chosen terrain if you spend 8 hours training, researching and observing a terrain of another type.

Favored Enemy- A ranger selects a favored enemy from the list. You have a bonus of 2x your Tier Level on Wisdom Survival and Wisdom Awareness Checks to track your favored enemies, as well as on Intelligence Checks to recall information about them. Likewise, you have a 2x Tier Level bonus to damage rolls against those creatures.

- Advantage on Survival Checks to track your favored enemies, as well as on Intelligence checks to recall information
- When you hit a creature with an attack roll, you can call on your bond with nature to mark your target as your favored enemy for 1 minute or until you lose concentration. The first time you deal damage to an enemy, you increase that damage by 1d4

- You deal an extra 1d6 damage to the target whenever you hit with a weapon attack, and you have advantage on Awareness and Survival checks you make to track it.
- A +2 bonus to Awareness and Survival checks against the target and a +2 bonus to damage rolls against the creatures

When you gain this feature, you also learn one language of your choice that is spoken by your favored enemies, if they speak one.

Hunter's Mark- You choose a creature within range. The target becomes a Favored Enemy. If you hunter's Mark your favored enemy, the bonus doubles.

MISSION STATEMENT

The goal of the system is not to completely replace D&D, but to present a rich experience with a similar level of ease of play

DESIGN PHILOSOPHY

What is the game's purpose, and who are you building this game for? Why are you building it?

The Wayfarers TTRPG system is meant to give players a wide variety of expression and customization through simple options. The goal is a system that removes redundancies that you would find in other TTRPGs and replaces them with streamlined mechanics, allowing players to adjust how complex and robust they want their mechanics to be and giving a more tailored experience. Not only mechanically, but it should better reflect the vision of your character narratively and thematically as well. The system itself is built to be setting agnostic, with the ability to facilitate a variety of genres and stories. Characters should be able to achieve a lot narratively but not necessarily be proficient in doing everything mechanically from the start. Any character can attempt to do almost anything, whether or not they're particularly good at it, but a character with the right skills will have a much easier time with their efforts.

Mechanically, each class needs to have an intuitive and easy-to-operate base tool kit that feels complete. Instead of having a rigid class-based system or a light, classless system, the idea is to have somewhat of a mix with a fluid system that uses classes as a way to categorize the general playstyle and types of abilities a player can have. A player should be able to do just about anything, but it should be difficult to be able to do everything. Group synergy isn't a necessity, but it is encouraged if you want to make use of team composition. With or without building a party around team composition, there will be many aspects of the game that can lead to epic moments if players are looking for that.

The three pillars of TTRPGs are all still equally present and can each be played up or down to fit any scenario.

Along with classes; feats, spells, and other aspects of the game are sorted into easily recognizable groups so players can quickly search for the kind of effects and abilities they're looking for. An expanded and categorized list of options for abilities should make for interesting characters. Two of the exact class and species can have the option of being wildly different, giving way to interesting character developments. not only in the character creation but also in roleplay. With an emphasis on interesting character developments, for balancing, helping with analysis paralysis, and giving a sense of progression, certain skills and abilities are required..

Combat length should be snappy yet have enough time to create and respond to opposing tactics. A quick combat should be roughly 2 to 3 rounds. A moderate combat should be about 4 to 5 rounds, and a boss battle or other long fight could take up to 6 or 8 rounds. Rounds in Wayfarers are 15 seconds, so a long fight, in reality, would only be roughly about 2 minutes. However, in other games, a round is usually 6 seconds, so an 8-round combat equates to only 48 seconds. Combat also doesn't need to use a grid. Most abilities can be explained in ranges of close (within 30 ft), near (30 to 60 ft), or far (60 ft+).

Vulnerability, Resistance, and Statuses

With the larger emphasis on resistances, vulnerabilities, and status effects, I'm tending to lean on lower dice values over larger ones. Especially when it comes to the number of dice on higher-value dice. Between the classes' abilities to create and spread vulnerabilities, there can easily be ways to make large numbers of enemies take considerable damage. While having large value dice dealing all max damage is fun, it should be something worked towards and not easily achievable. Characters and enemies alike will also have lower health pools to make combat seem less like HP sponge battles. Utilizing abilities that control the field, create opportunities, and do things other than just what does the most damage should make the combat much more interesting and rewarding. Combat should be at its best when it's an intricate dance between attacking positioning, creating advantageous situations, attacking, and defending.

Exploration and navigation

Making exploration fun. Being one of the Pillars of TTRPGs, exploration has always been a rather dull part of the game. It generally comes down to a series of nights where you take shifts keeping watch and seeing if anything wild creatures attack, or making rolls to see if you survive the wilderness and find your way to the location you were sent to. Especially since there are classes like rangers and druids who are meant to thrive in wilderness and exploration situations, this system is intended to bring a lot of fun and dynamic gameplay. Events, skill challenges, and other things. Every class has at least one way to interact with the environment and explore.

Social Interactions and Roleplay

Every character should have some type of secret or background information that they will check in with at each tier level. This gives the players not only a reason to play through the story but also to explore their character and relations with others.

The GM

A lot of the system has been thought around the GM to have an easier and more streamlined experience. Obstacles have been removed for the GM to have an easier time with encounters, navigating the game, and focusing on the story. Not only should GMs spend less time rolling dice during the game, but there are multiple ways the game helps the GM keep track of players, actions, and decisions. There are also systems in place to give the GM more ways to incorporate character backstories and moments into every tier of play.

The Types of Experiences and Stories Told

This system is designed to be setting agnostic, with the ability to host many story types. The most clear one, however, is the Hero's Journey. Player characters are meant to be heroes going through hardships, so a lot of the mechanics come from a place of strength but with constraints. As such, the lower tiers of the game can easily feel challenging, as you are still a lower-level adventurer. Players also should not feel like they have to optimize their character to be successful. The Player can decide how mechanically crunchy they want their character to be while the GM can focus on the storytelling. Players should also have a flaw and a secret for the GM to weave in and out of the story. The Wayfarers system should provide many opportunities for meaningful stakes from both a story and a mechanical perspective.

Scenes

A scene is a segment of gameplay. A scene can be a general event such as a battle, a negotiation with a noble, an exploration, or an escape from an area. In essence, anything that can be an encounter or story beat can be classified as a scene. Framing things as scenes should help narratively with the GM able to set scenes, focus a scene around a character or event, and transition from one to another. It can also help distinguish which characters are where. Narratively, some effects can take place for the duration of an entire scene to give that scene a desired feel or effect. Most scenes are roughly up to half an hour, though that can be extended or reduced depending on what is intended. Instead of only short and long rests, scenes can also be used to refresh or activate certain character abilities or allow for once-per-scene abilities. Abilities such as a Berserker's rage, or a Bard's Encore ability to refresh for a scene seems thematic. Another aspect of the game is to try to give thematic reasons for mechanics and to make mechanical reasons to thematic abilities when possible.

Conflict- Conflict scenes are things such as a battle or a chase, or tense interaction between characters

Interlude- interlude scenes are slower-paced moments like an exploration or time in town where the GM can describe sequences of time passing

GM- Scenes where there are no Player Characters present and players are spectators. Mainly used to set the stage and transition to other scenes in the story. GM Scenes can be used to foreshadow events, give a glimpse into the villain's actions, or introduce a future threat or obstacle.

Why Will This Be Fun

Whether you want to try out character concepts, live out your power fantasy, venture out and explore the world, or engage in deep roleplay, there should be something for every player. There is also more narratively for the GM to do and a smoother way for the GM to frame and progress the story with tons of help

Tiers

Each tier is supposed to be representative of an approximate level of powers and abilities. Tiers are also a good gauge of what could and should be happening in a campaign. Longer campaigns can use tiers to break up a story into acts. Tiers can, and probably should be used for the GM to take inventory of the players and what their characters are up to, similar to how a session zero gauges your players' involvement at the beginning of the campaign. Tiers are also used in instances in place of proficiency bonuses. And since the tier levels are 1 through 4, it's quite easy to adjust the numbers. One of the recurring philosophies in the system is to start small and scale accordingly.

Leveling up

Choosing how you want to level up should reduce the time it takes for a player to scan their sheet, because they'll be choosing each different ability. They can also have fewer abilities and focus on improving the potency of each ability

Expanded Tier Gameplay

Tier 1 is really good for gritty realism and horror campaigns, Tier 4 gameplay has fully realized characters

[INSERT PICTURE OF CHARACTER SHEET]

Attributes and Skills

Might- physical strength and endurance

Dexterity- nimbleness, agility, and hand-eye coordination

Intelligence- learned knowledge and understanding

Wisdom- observation, awareness, and reasoning

Presence- charm, empathy, and persuasiveness

Resolve- determination, influence, and resistance to external forces

Attribute Numbers

Although the attributes max out at 10, they should not be maxed out quickly. Attribute numbers still rather closely mirror the D&D modifier numbers. In fact, with the ability to use attributes to boost, the same number in Wayfarers is noticeably stronger than it is in D&D. That being said, a Tier 1 character having a 10 in any attribute shouldn't be possible. That would, in effect, be a level 1 through 5 character with a 30 in an Ability Score and the ability to boost, which would inflate numbers more than needed. Tier 1 characters should have ability scores up to 4 or 5, Tier 2 up to 7, Tier 3 up to 9, and the ability to max out some abilities when they reach the last tier. This, however doesn't mean all of their stats should be maxxed out in tier 4. There is also nothing wrong with having your highest stat being a 6 or 7 in tier 4. That's still equivalent to 22 to a 25 in D&D.

Instead of having just a standard array, there's a variety of standard arrays to choose from. Realistically, anything as long as no number exceeds 4 and the numbers all equal 12 should be fine

Starting Attribute Arrays:

Jack of All Trades- 2, 2, 2, 2, 2, 2

Standard- 3, 3, 2, 2, 1, 1

Specialized- 4, 3, 2, 1, 1, 1

Heroic- 4, 4, 3, 2, 1, 1

Even with the starting arrays this "seemingly low", it's still a decent bit stronger than a starting 5e character standard array. By comparison, the standard array for 5e is 2, 2, 1, 1, 0, -1 for a total of +5. So by a "decent bit", I mean over two times stronger. I am toying with the idea of letting characters have a 0 in a stat.

Skill Challenges

Skill challenges have a difficulty rank and the GM tells the party what the rank is before they roll so they have an idea of how challenging it'll be. So if it's a Demanding task, the party knows that the DC will be between 20 and 24. Enemy DCs can also be described this way.

5	Routine
10	Simple
15	Average
20	Demanding
25	Tough
30	Challenging
35	Daunting
40	Formidable
45	Epic
50	Nigh Impossible

Why different Attributes and why resolve is good

Luffy and Naruto aren't smart, especially in the beginning of their stories, and they're not really the most charismatic a lot of the time, but they have the resolve and determination to get things done. Resolve allows facilitating more horror themes without relying on just Intellect and wisdom

Pushing/boosting

Rolling d6 for skill checks

Stunts: rolling the same dice number on a skill check

Fate Points/Waypoints

What's the point of boosting?

I was never much of a fan of spells like guidance that you can spam

Action Points and Rolling Them In The Beginning of the Round, so everyone knows what their combat potency is in the beginning of each round. There may be abilities that allow copying or switching action dice

Lower numbers, less HP bloat, and more unique skills and abilities

Having fun and unique abilities to string together instead of everything being a mound of hit points. Also, some enemies have certain conditions for them to be able to take adequate damage.

Damage scaling and lower numbers

Feats

Feats are grouped into categories. General Feats, Origin Feats, Lineage Feats, Base Class Feats, Subclass Feats, and Prestige Class Feats. Feats are also tiered, with more potent feats of course being saved for later tiers. This should do two things: one, it gives a sense of building and progression similar to talent trees. And two, it allows for wilder and potentially game-breaking feats at the later levels. I do want there to be a balance between having players able to freely choose whatever feats they want to create the character they want, and a sense of progression, so feat trees probably shouldn't be more than 4 feats long. Which could sound like a lot, but players get two feat points every time they level, so realistically it's not a huge restraint at all.

I want class feats to be fairly straightforward. I also want there to be some kind of reward for players who want to be a strict base class without dipping too much, or at all into subclasses or prestige classes by having.

Feats will be sorted in different categories to make it easier for players to get what they want. Thinking about giving each category an icon to make it easier for reference.

Multiclassing

Subclasses

Subclasses let players either specialize into one of their specific playstyles or give a new option to the class

What's a Prestige class

Where a subclass is a branch of a class, a Prestige Class can be seen as a convergent class. A class specialization that multiple classes could have something in common or a path that multiple classes could go towards and converge in a similar place. The idea of two necromancers, one from a warlock background and one from a wizard background, is interesting and can lead to some really interesting narrative moments. There could be a whole tribe of necromancers, shaman, or grove keepers, all dedicated to a similar cause and study but coming from different walks of life.

Quicker Turns

Action Points

Attributes:

Attributes represent, not only how strong you are in a basic ability, but the amount of energy and how long you can exert yourself in a type of ability before you exhaust yourself. Pushing an attribute when you have nothing to push gives you a level of exhaustion.

Exhaustion and wounds:

Exhaustion and wounds are ailments and negative effects on your character. Exhaustion shouldn't feel like death. In fact, during an extraneous session, it could be common to burn out one of your attributes and gain levels of exhaustion.

Turns being 15 secs. You already know

Since spells don't run on spell slots and instead have cooldowns, characters will have fewer spells equipped at the ready. Fullcasters in 5e have up to 8 spells by level 5 and cap out around 15-20 spells. 20 spells for a caster in Wayfarers is far too many and makes cooldowns for spells trivial. The idea is to cut the number of spells a player can use by at least half. However, spells are streamlined, so there will be less spell bloat to weigh characters down. Many spells, even cantrips can have multiple uses and be upcasted. My initial idea is that cantrips are tied to your spell attribute, full casters get two spells per tier level, and half casters have one spell per tier level. Another intention is to have the higher-tiered spells more potent than the lower-tier spells, but the lower-tier spells still have viability. However, every spell doesn't need to have an upcasting ability. Kind of like Pokemon. Every Pokemon doesn't need a full evolution line. Some can be just one or two stage evolution. In fact, the more variability in where spells sit in the tiers, the better. Trying to get to under 300 spells total. Having fewer spells and more options with each spell should add a lot of importance and texture to spellcasting. The reworking of spell schools and spell descriptors. Spell schools are reworked to better classify them, and all spells have an attribute. Critical hits with spells will give additional options based on their attribute. I also want to experiment with the timing of spells. Certain spells get a bonus if they are used at certain points in a round compared to when other players have acted. Lightning spells might have an additional effect against people who haven't acted yet, whereas earth spells may have an additional effect against those who have. This can give more of a reason to use certain spells at different times

Since spells have cooldowns instead of spell slots, players are able to cast multiple spells in a turn, and spells have more versatility, spells will seem to have a great deal more efficiency. With that being the case, I'm tending to lean on reducing some aspects of spells, whether it be damage, range, or the amount of time it's active, to keep things in check

Cover

Walls, trees, creatures, and other obstacles can provide cover during combat, making a target more difficult to harm. A target can benefit from cover only when an attack or other effect originates on the opposite side of the cover. There are three degrees of cover. If a target is behind multiple sources of cover, only the most protective degree of cover applies; the degrees aren't added together. For example, if a target is behind a creature that gives light cover and a tree trunk that gives heavy cover, the target has heavy cover.

Light Cover- A target with light cover has a +2 bonus to AC and Dexterity saving throws. A target has light cover if an obstacle blocks at least half of its body. The obstacle might be a low wall, a large piece of furniture, a narrow tree trunk, or a creature, whether that creature is an enemy or a friend. You are not generally able to hide in light cover.

Heavy Cover- A target with heavy cover has a +5 bonus to AC and Dexterity saving throws. A target has heavy cover if most of it is covered by an obstacle. The obstacle might be a portcullis, a full wall, or a thick tree trunk.

Total Cover- A target with total cover gains a bonus to stealth and can't generally be targeted directly by an attack or a spell, although some spells can reach such a target by including it in an area of effect. A target has total cover if an obstacle completely conceals it from view.

Lightly Obscured- Darkness and other effects that obscure vision can prove a significant hindrance. A target that is lightly obscured has a disadvantage on Perception checks that rely on sight. Lightly obscured areas might be dim light, light fog, or moderate foliage.

Class Roles

Although each class is competent by itself, and you can customize your character however you want, classes fall into roles or paradigms that they generally excel in. They are the warrior, the mage, the expert, and the gifted.

Vanguard

The warrior-type classes, masters of melee combat. They generally have the highest defense and excellent close-up offense. Primary front-line combatants. They have abilities that help their allies maneuver around the battlefield and make it difficult for the enemies.]

Berserker-An unstoppable force of wrath. Its class feature is Rage. An unarmored melee warrior that deals damage and can reduce incoming damage. In exploration[]. In social situations [].

- Fury of the Runscarred- Berserkers who have magical runes etched into their flesh.
- Fury of the Wildlands
- Fury of the Blood Frenzy- A Blood Frenzy Berserker is constantly seeking out conflict to feed their craving for battle. When they throw themselves into battle to , they sometimes rile up those around them.
- Fury of Valhalla
- Fury of Smoldering Wrath- Harnessing the power of the suppressed rage that burns underneath the surface, these Berserkers can maintain their composure while raging to let everything out in precise, vicious attacks.

Soldier- Armored fighter. Battlefield tactician and weaponmaster. A tactical fighter that commands and maneuvers around the battlefield. Its class resource is Valor. An armored fighter who is proficient in multiple weapons and excels in positioning and manipulating the battlefield.

- Valor of the Gunslinger
- Valor of the Warblade
- Valor of the Knight Marshal
- Valor of the Champion
- Valor of the Gladiator

Martial Artist- Analog to the Monk. An unarmored melee fighter who uses their body as a weapon. Able to deal powerful blows and offer support by applying status effects. Their class resource is focus.

- Discipline of the Drunken Master- redirection and unpredictability
- Discipline of the Gentle Fist- healing
- Discipline of the Striker- increased damage
- Discipline of the Grappler- better grapples
- Discipline of the Elements- stance changes

Guardian- Analog to the Paladin, but with more of a focus on defensive measures. Defender of the weak, avenger of the fallen. Their class resource is []. With their limited number of spells, their ranged options are limited, but they excel offensively and especially defensively. Versatile armored warrior that can support the party as well as smite enemies. Similar to the Paladin, they should not be much of a threat from distance, and a bit of their gameplay is to get both allies and enemies in their aura radius to be the most effective.

MISSION STATEMENT

The goal of the system is not to completely replace D&D, but to present a rich experience with a similar level of ease of play

DESIGN PHILOSOPHY

What is the game's purpose, and who are you building this game for? Why are you building it?

The Wayfarers TTRPG system is meant to give players a wide variety of expression and customization through simple options. The goal is a system that removes redundancies that you would find in other TTRPGs and replaces them with streamlined mechanics, allowing players to adjust how complex and robust they want their mechanics to be and giving a more tailored experience. Not only mechanically, but it should better reflect the vision of your character narratively and thematically as well. The system itself is built to be setting agnostic, with the ability to facilitate a variety of genres and stories. Characters should be able to achieve a lot narratively but not necessarily be proficient in doing everything mechanically from the start. Any character can attempt to do almost anything, whether or not they're particularly good at it, but a character with the right skills will have a much easier time with their efforts.

Mechanically, each class needs to have an intuitive and easy-to-operate base tool kit that feels complete. Instead of having a rigid class-based system or a light, classless system, the idea is to have somewhat of a mix with a fluid system that uses classes as a way to categorize the general playstyle and types of abilities a player can have. A player should be able to do just about anything, but it should be difficult to be able to do everything. Group synergy isn't a necessity, but it is encouraged if you want to make use of team composition. With or without building a party around team composition, there will be many aspects of the game that can lead to epic moments if players are looking for that.

The three pillars of TTRPGs are all still equally present and can each be played up or down to fit any scenario.

Along with classes; feats, spells, and other aspects of the game are sorted into easily recognizable groups so players can quickly search for the kind of effects and abilities they're looking for. An expanded and categorized list of options for abilities should make for interesting characters. Two of the exact class and species can have the option of being wildly different, giving way to interesting character developments. not only in the character creation but also in roleplay. With an emphasis on interesting character developments, for balancing, helping with analysis paralysis, and giving a sense of progression, certain skills and abilities are required..

Combat length should be snappy yet have enough time to create and respond to opposing tactics. A quick combat should be roughly 2 to 3 rounds. A moderate combat should be about 4 to 5 rounds, and a boss battle or other long fight could take up to 6 or 8 rounds. Rounds in Wayfarers are 15 seconds, so a long fight, in reality, would only be roughly about 2 minutes. However, in other games, a round is usually 6 seconds, so an 8-round combat equates to only 48 seconds. Combat also doesn't need to use a grid. Most abilities can be explained in ranges of close (within 30 ft), near (30 to 60 ft), or far (60 ft+).

Vulnerability, Resistance, and Statuses

With the larger emphasis on resistances, vulnerabilities, and status effects, I'm tending to lean on lower dice values over larger ones. Especially when it comes to the number of dice on higher-value dice. Between the classes' abilities to create and spread vulnerabilities, there can easily be ways to make large numbers of enemies take considerable damage. While having large value dice dealing all max damage is fun, it should be something worked towards and not easily achievable. Characters and enemies alike will also have lower health pools to make combat seem less like HP sponge battles. Utilizing abilities that control the field, create opportunities, and do things other than just what does the most damage should make the combat much more interesting and rewarding. Combat should be at its best when it's an intricate dance between attacking positioning, creating advantageous situations, attacking, and defending.

Exploration and navigation

Making exploration fun. Being one of the Pillars of TTRPGs, exploration has always been a rather dull part of the game. It generally comes down to a series of nights where you take shifts keeping watch and seeing if anything wild creatures attack, or making rolls to see if you survive the wilderness and find your way to the location you were sent to. Especially since there are classes like rangers and druids who are meant to thrive in wilderness and exploration situations, this system is intended to bring a lot of fun and dynamic gameplay. Events, skill challenges, and other things. Every class has at least one way to interact with the environment and explore.

Social Interactions and Roleplay

Every character should have some type of secret or background information that they will check in with at each tier level. This gives the players not only a reason to play through the story but also to explore their character and relations with others.

The GM

A lot of the system has been thought around the GM to have an easier and more streamlined experience. Obstacles have been removed for the GM to have an easier time with encounters, navigating the game, and focusing on the story. Not only should GMs spend less time rolling dice during the game, but there are multiple ways the game helps the GM keep track of players, actions, and decisions. There are also systems in place to give the GM more ways to incorporate character backstories and moments into every tier of play.

The Types of Experiences and Stories Told

This system is designed to be setting agnostic, with the ability to host many story types. The most clear one, however, is the Hero's Journey. Player characters are meant to be heroes going through hardships, so a lot of the mechanics come from a place of strength but with constraints. As such, the lower tiers of the game can easily feel challenging, as you are still a lower-level adventurer. Players also should not feel like they have to optimize their character to be successful. The Player can decide how mechanically crunchy they want their character to be while the GM can focus on the storytelling. Players should also have a flaw and a secret for the GM to weave in and out of the story. The Wayfarers system should provide many opportunities for meaningful stakes from both a story and a mechanical perspective.

Scenes

A scene is a segment of gameplay. A scene can be a general event such as a battle, a negotiation with a noble, an exploration, or an escape from an area. In essence, anything that can be an encounter or story beat can be classified as a scene. Framing things as scenes should help narratively with the GM able to set scenes, focus a scene around a character or event, and transition from one to another. It can also help distinguish which characters are where. Narratively, some effects can take place for the duration of an entire scene to give that scene a desired feel or effect. Most scenes are roughly up to half an hour, though that can be extended or reduced depending on what is intended. Instead of only short and long rests, scenes can also be used to refresh or activate certain character abilities or allow for once-per-scene abilities. Abilities such as a Berserker's rage, or a Bard's Encore ability to refresh for a scene seems thematic. Another aspect of the game is to try to give thematic reasons for mechanics and to make mechanical reasons to thematic abilities when possible.

Conflict- Conflict scenes are things such as a battle or a chase, or tense interaction between characters

Interlude- interlude scenes are slower-paced moments like an exploration or time in town where the GM can describe sequences of time passing

GM- Scenes where there are no Player Characters present and players are spectators. Mainly used to set the stage and transition to other scenes in the story. GM Scenes can be used to foreshadow events, give a glimpse into the villain's actions, or introduce a future threat or obstacle.

Why Will This Be Fun

Whether you want to try out character concepts, live out your power fantasy, venture out and explore the world, or engage in deep roleplay, there should be something for every player. There is also more narratively for the GM to do and a smoother way for the GM to frame and progress the story with tons of help

Tiers

Each tier is supposed to be representative of an approximate level of powers and abilities. Tiers are also a good gauge of what could and should be happening in a campaign. Longer campaigns can use tiers to break up a story into acts. Tiers can, and probably should be used for the GM to take inventory of the players and what their characters are up to, similar to how a session zero gauges your players' involvement at the beginning of the campaign. Tiers are also used in instances in place of proficiency bonuses. And since the tier levels are 1 through 4, it's quite easy to adjust the numbers. One of the recurring philosophies in the system is to start small and scale accordingly.

Leveling up

Choosing how you want to level up should reduce the time it takes for a player to scan their sheet, because they'll be choosing each different ability. They can also have fewer abilities and focus on improving the potency of each ability

Expanded Tier Gameplay

Tier 1 is really good for gritty realism and horror campaigns, Tier 4 gameplay has fully realized characters

[INSERT PICTURE OF CHARACTER SHEET]

Attributes and Skills

Might- physical strength and endurance

Dexterity- nimbleness, agility, and hand-eye coordination

Intelligence- learned knowledge and understanding

Wisdom- observation, awareness, and reasoning

Presence- charm, empathy, and persuasiveness

Resolve- determination, influence, and resistance to external forces

Attribute Numbers

Although the attributes max out at 10, they should not be maxed out quickly. Attribute numbers still rather closely mirror the D&D modifier numbers. In fact, with the ability to use attributes to boost, the same number in Wayfarers is noticeably stronger than it is in D&D. That being said, a Tier 1 character having a 10 in any attribute shouldn't be possible. That would, in effect, be a level 1 through 5 character with a 30 in an Ability Score and the ability to boost, which would inflate numbers more than needed. Tier 1 characters should have ability scores up to 4 or 5, Tier 2 up to 7, Tier 3 up to 9, and the ability to max out some abilities when they reach the last tier. This, however doesn't mean all of their stats should be maxxed out in tier 4. There is also nothing wrong with having your highest stat being a 6 or 7 in tier 4. That's still equivalent to 22 to a 25 in D&D.

Instead of having just a standard array, there's a variety of standard arrays to choose from. Realistically, anything as long as no number exceeds 4 and the numbers all equal 12 should be fine

Starting Attribute Arrays:

Jack of All Trades- 2, 2, 2, 2, 2, 2

Standard- 3, 3, 2, 2, 1, 1

Specialized- 4, 3, 2, 1, 1, 1

Heroic- 4, 4, 3, 2, 1, 1

Even with the starting arrays this "seemingly low", it's still a decent bit stronger than a starting 5e character standard array. By comparison, the standard array for 5e is 2, 2, 1, 1, 0, -1 for a total of +5. So by a "decent bit", I mean over two times stronger. I am toying with the idea of letting characters have a 0 in a stat.

Skill Challenges

Skill challenges have a difficulty rank and the GM tells the party what the rank is before they roll so they have an idea of how challenging it'll be. So if it's a Demanding task, the party knows that the DC will be between 20 and 24. Enemy DCs can also be described this way.

5	Routine
10	Simple
15	Average
20	Demanding
25	Tough
30	Challenging
35	Daunting
40	Formidable
45	Epic
50	Nigh Impossible

Why different Attributes and why resolve is good

Luffy and Naruto aren't smart, especially in the beginning of their stories, and they're not really the most charismatic a lot of the time, but they have the resolve and determination to get things done. Resolve allows facilitating more horror themes without relying on just Intellect and wisdom

Boosting

Rolling d6 for skill checks

Stunts: rolling the same dice number on a skill check

Fate Points/Waypoints

What's the point of boosting?

I was never much of a fan of spells like guidance that you can spam

Action Points and Rolling Them In The Beginning of the Round, so everyone knows what their combat potency is in the beginning of each round. There may be abilities that allow copying or switching action dice

Lower numbers, less HP bloat, and more unique skills and abilities

Having fun and unique abilities to string together instead of everything being a mound of hit points. Also, some enemies have certain conditions for them to be able to take adequate damage.

Damage scaling and lower numbers

Feats

Feats are grouped into categories. General Feats, Origin Feats, Lineage Feats, Base Class Feats, Subclass Feats, and Prestige Class Feats. Feats are also tiered, with more potent feats of course being saved for later tiers. This should do two things: one, it gives a sense of building and progression similar to talent trees. And two, it allows for wilder and potentially game-breaking feats at the later levels. I do want there to be a balance between having players able to freely choose whatever feats they want to create the character they want, and a sense of progression, so feat trees probably shouldn't be more than 4 feats long. Which could sound like a lot, but players get two feat points every time they level, so realistically it's not a huge restraint at all.

I want class feats to be fairly straightforward. I also want there to be some kind of reward for players who want to be a strict base class without dipping too much, or at all into subclasses or prestige classes by having.

Feats will be sorted in different categories to make it easier for players to get what they want. Thinking about giving each category an icon to make it easier for reference.

Multiclassing

Subclasses

Subclasses let players either specialize into one of their specific playstyles or give a new option to the class

What's a Prestige class

Where a subclass is a branch of a class, a Prestige Class can be seen as a convergent class. A class specialization that multiple classes could have something in common or a path that multiple classes could go towards and converge in a similar place. The idea of two necromancers, one from a warlock background and one from a wizard background, is interesting and can lead to some really interesting narrative moments. There could be a whole tribe of necromancers, shaman, or grove keepers, all dedicated to a similar cause and study but coming from different walks of life.

Quicker Turns

Action Points

You get 4 Action Points per turn. Your Action Points refresh at the end of your turn

Attributes:

Attributes represent, not only how strong you are in a basic ability, but the amount of energy and how long you can exert yourself in a type of ability before you exhaust yourself. Pushing an attribute when you have nothing to push gives you a level of exhaustion.

Exhaustion and wounds:

Exhaustion and wounds are ailments and negative effects on your character. Exhaustion shouldn't feel like death. In fact, during an extraneous session, it could be common to burn out one of your attributes and gain levels of exhaustion.

Turns being 15 secs. You already know

Since spells don't run on spell slots and instead have cooldowns, characters will have fewer spells equipped at the ready. Fullcasters in 5e have up to 8 spells by level 5 and cap out around 15-20 spells. 20 spells for a caster in Wayfarers is far too many and makes cooldowns for spells trivial. The idea is to cut the number of spells a player can use by at least half. However, spells are streamlined, so there will be less spell bloat to weigh characters down. Many spells, even cantrips can have multiple uses and be upcasted. My initial idea is that cantrips are tied to your spell attribute, full casters get two spells per tier level, and half casters have one spell per tier level. Another intention is to have the higher-tiered spells more potent than the lower-tier spells, but the lower-tier spells still have viability. However, every spell doesn't need to have an upcasting ability. Kind of like Pokemon. Every Pokemon doesn't need a full evolution line. Some can be just one or two stage evolution. In fact, the more variability in where spells sit in the tiers, the better. Trying to get to under 300 spells total. Having fewer spells and more options with each spell should add a lot of importance and texture to spellcasting. The reworking of spell schools and spell descriptors. Spell schools are reworked to better classify them, and all spells have an attribute. Critical hits with spells will give additional options based on their attribute. I also want to experiment with the timing of spells. Certain spells get a bonus if they are used at certain points in a round compared to when other players have acted. Lightning spells might have an additional effect against people who haven't acted yet, whereas earth spells may have an additional effect against those who have. This can give more of a reason to use certain spells at different times

Since spells have cooldowns instead of spell slots, players are able to cast multiple spells in a turn, and spells have more versatility, spells will seem to have a great deal more efficiency. With that being the case, I'm tending to lean on reducing some aspects of spells, whether it be damage, range, or the amount of time it's active, to keep things in check

Walls, trees, creatures, and other obstacles can provide cover during combat, making a target more difficult to harm. A target can benefit from cover only when an attack or other effect originates on the opposite side of the cover. There are three degrees of cover. If a target is behind multiple sources of cover, only the most protective degree of cover applies; the degrees aren't added together. For example, if a target is behind a creature that gives light cover and a tree trunk that gives heavy cover, the target has heavy cover.

Light Cover- A target with light cover has a +2 bonus to AC and Dexterity saving throws. A target has light cover if an obstacle blocks at least half of its body. The obstacle might be a low wall, a large piece of furniture, a narrow tree trunk, or a creature, whether that creature is an enemy or a friend. You are not generally able to hide in light cover.

Heavy Cover- A target with heavy cover has a +5 bonus to AC and Dexterity saving throws. A target has heavy cover if most of it is covered by an obstacle. The obstacle might be a portcullis, a full wall, or a thick tree trunk.

Total Cover- A target with total cover gains a bonus to stealth and can't generally be targeted directly by an attack or a spell, although some spells can reach such a target by including it in an area of effect. A target has total cover if an obstacle completely conceals it from view.

Lightly Obscured- Darkness and other effects that obscure vision can prove a significant hindrance. A target that is lightly obscured has a disadvantage on Perception checks that rely on sight. Lightly obscured areas might be dim light, light fog, or moderate foliage.

Class Roles

Although each class is competent by itself, and you can customize your character however you want, classes fall into roles or paradigms that they generally excel in. They are the warrior, the mage, the expert, and the gifted.

Vanguard

The warrior-type classes, masters of melee combat. They generally have the highest defense and excellent close-up offense. Primary front-line combatants. They have abilities that help their allies maneuver around the battlefield and make it difficult for the enemies.]

Berserker-An unstoppable force of wrath. Its class feature is Rage. An unarmored melee warrior that deals damage and can reduce incoming damage. In exploration[]. In social situations [].

- Fury of the Runscarred- Berserkers who have magical runes etched into their flesh.
- Fury of the Wildlands
- Fury of the Blood Frenzy- A Blood Frenzy Berserker is constantly seeking out conflict to feed their craving for battle. When they throw themselves into battle to , they sometimes rile up those around them.
- Fury of Valhalla
- Fury of Smoldering Wrath- Harnessing the power of the suppressed rage that burns underneath the surface, these Berserkers can maintain their composure while raging to let everything out in precise, vicious attacks.

Soldier- Armored fighter. Battlefield tactician and weaponmaster. A tactical fighter that commands and maneuvers around the battlefield. Its class resource is Valor. An armored fighter who is proficient in multiple weapons and excels in positioning and manipulating the battlefield.

- Valor of the Gunslinger
- Valor of the Warblade
- Valor of the Knight Marshal
- Valor of the Champion
- Valor of the Gladiator

Martial Artist- Analog to the Monk. An unarmored melee fighter who uses their body as a weapon. Able to deal powerful blows and offer support by applying status effects. Their class resource is focus.

- Discipline of the Drunken Master- redirection and unpredictability
- Discipline of the Gentle Fist- healing
- Discipline of the Striker- increased damage
- Discipline of the Grappler- better grapples
- Discipline of the Elements- stance changes

Guardian- Analog to the Paladin, but with more of a focus on defensive measures. Defender of the weak, avenger of the fallen. Their class resource is []. With their limited number of spells, their ranged options are limited, but they excel offensively and especially defensively. Versatile armored warrior that can support the party as well as smite enemies. Similar to the Paladin, they should not be much of a threat from distance, and a bit of their gameplay is to get both allies and enemies in their aura radius to be the most effective.

- Oath of Sacrifice
- Oath of Conquest
- Oath of Vengeance
- Oath of Judgement
- Oath of Protection

Paragon

The mage-type classes. The most proficient in their magical origin. Potent spellcasting. Able to affect large areas and deal with groups of enemies at once through crowd control, creating hazardous terrain, or hampering foes.

Arcanist

Previously, the wizard, the Arcanist is the quintessential arcane caster. Their class resource is scripts. Arcanists are scribes and scholars who seek to understand the fabric and mechanics of the arcane.

Currently working on:

- ☐ Reducing the number of spells and creating a working Spell Tag system
- ☐ Playing with the idea of feats that level up to give a move a visible progression path.
- ☐ A more interesting armor and weapon system
- ☐ A more interesting health and status management system
